

Rodent Quarantine Estimate of Charges (FY 24-25)

The cost depends on the number of rodents acquired.

Please contact DLAMTechs@urmc.rochester.edu with questions.

All rodents acquired from non-routine sources (e.g. other universities and institutions) are prohibited from entering standard housing at the University of Rochester until the health status of each group has been assessed by the veterinary staff. Rodents from non-routine sources pose a potential threat to our specific pathogen free (SPF) colonies and must therefore undergo a quarantine period before they can be housed with our resident populations.

Prior to mouse importation, the veterinary team reviews health reports and facility descriptions of all non-routine orders. Once approved, the Animal Resource will arrange importation of these animals into a restricted quarantine housing area. Upon arrival, veterinary staff examine each mouse and generate an inventory of the animals received. During quarantine, each mouse is tested and prophylactically treated for internal and external parasites. At the conclusion of the quarantine treatment period, the rodents will be tested via a non-invasive method for a panel of pathogens restricted from URMCM prior to release into standard housing. The average length of rodent quarantine is approximately four weeks however, this is subject to change. The information below applies to import groups of up to 10 cages. Larger groups will incur additional fees. Please consult with DCM veterinary staff for more information. The included pricing does not apply to groups that require Cesarean section rederivation or cross foster rederivation.
