

Sports Medicine

UR Medicine / Noyes Health Physical Therapy works in conjunction with Genesee Regional Orthopedics and Sports Medicine, the orthopedic practice of UR Medicine / Noyes Health to provide seamless care for sports injuries. The Physicians and Physicians Assistants of the practice frequently interface and trouble-shoot in the therapy area with therapists, assuring each athlete is cared for expediently with the highest level of quality.

Noyes takes a collaborative approach to the treatment of athletes of all ages. There is constant communication between the physical therapists and the physicians. The communication between physical therapists and physicians sets the UR Medicine / Noyes Health Physical Therapy Program apart from others.

There are several former college athletes in the physical therapy program in addition to one of the orthopedic surgeons, Dr. O'Keefe, who was a collegiate athlete, playing Division I basketball at Creighton University. The provider's backgrounds uniquely position the practice to best care for athletes.

UR Medicine / Noyes Health Physical Therapy works readily with various orthopedic practices throughout our region. Patients are commonly shared with orthopedists from the University of Rochester, the health system to which Noyes Health belongs. The partnership is designed to allow patients the highest quality care, close to home.
